

Why Read Aloud?

From the moment parents read the time in the morning, or share the label on a box of cereal, to reading the note from Grandma, reading out loud is a part of family literacy.

Reading together is a natural human connection.

Children love the sound of parents' voices.

Reading together shows children that reading can be a loving experience.

Reading out loud helps children understand their world.

Reading out loud helps everyone be stronger speakers, readers and writers.

Children copy what they see and hear.

How to Help Your Child Learn

Talk about what you are doing

Look at your child

Listen as your child talks

Tell your child a story

Read to your child each day

Talk about the story

Praise your child

Share one new word, song, game, craft or activity every day

Use your First language

Used with permission from Family Literacy for Credit Facilitator Manual, 1999.