5 WAYS to PLAY Board Games Build Literacy Skills

1. Rolling dice and counting spaces on a game board builds math literacy.
2. Card games, like Go Fish, teach symbol matching which is a pre-reading skill!
3. Want to work on physical literacy? Just throw a dance party in your living room.
4. Many games have an element of money - what a great way to introduce financial literacy.
5. Taking turns and learning to lose with grace, builds emotional literacy!

Families are invited to travel through the Gateway Mall to find pages of the book, Never Rub Noses with a Narwhal by Ruth Wellborn. The final page of the book will be located at the Prince Albert Literacy Network office.

Participating families will receive a FREE family fun kit. The kit will include a copy of the book and everything you will need for a groovy family game night!

The FUN Continues!!!

Family Literacy Day - Jan. 27th

In partnership with the Saskatchewan Literacy Network and the Saskatchewan Family Literacy Hubs, we are excited to promote the online reading and story stretcher activity by Ruth Wellborn about her book, Never Rub Noses with a Narwhal.

Adult Learners Favour Their Own Learning Styles

Do you prefer to learn in a certain way? Perhaps you are a visual learner who learns best by reading and looking at images and diagrams. Maybe you prefer an auditory learning experience like listening to an instructor or a podcast. If you learn using a hands-on approach, you are a kinesthetic learner. We are all capable of learning via all of these learning styles but we usually favour one. By understanding the different ways that people learn, you can improve your own learning and your tutoring strategies.

 Visual Learners: use a whiteboard, worksheets or flashcards, draw out a concept using different colours, demonstrate

 Auditory Learners: speak clearly, read aloud, read together, invite discussion, listen to recordings

 Kinesthetic Learners: take frequent movement breaks, walk and talk, encourage writing, change the tutoring location
